where were you when the skies closed and the rains came where were you when the sun came crashing down where were you when the deluge swept all life away did you observe the carnage from higher ground is there any hope left to rebuild with all this blood mercilessly spilled all our dreams have died here in this hurricane washed away through city streets to the sea

all our forefathers cried here as they built this home on the range now all that remains are the few who climbed the trees

washed away

where were you when the skies cleared and the sun shone down where were you after everything was washed to the sea where were you when we took stock of our meager remains where were you when we needed to believe
